DEATH ON THE RIVER.

Collision of the Steamers Lomas and Scioto on the Ohio River Over 30 Persons Drowned

[illegible] the [illegible] Mingo Junction [illegible] this [illegible] while [illegible] feet [illegible] time of the collision [illegible] heartrending and life [illegible] be[illegible] The Lomas was only slightly injured and went to work at once to save the [illegible] and the unfortunate [illegible] This task was rendered [illegible] the bright moonlight and no [illegible] saved from this reason It is now believed that the first report is exaggerated and that the loss of life will not exceed 30 persons

Arthur S McNulty, who lives at Cross creek was an eye witness of the whole matter He was standing in the door immediately opposite where the collision occurred It was about 8 o'clock Lomas in passing Island Chute whistled for preference of sides and as near as he can judge it was three minutes before the Scioto answered and neither appeared to sheer off and almost immediately the collision occurred General confusion followed I saw people jumping from the hurricane deck and all parts of the steamer As far as I could see the Lomas struck the Scioto forward, for the flew over the bow of the Scioto The Scioto sank almost instantly The Lomas backed up as soon as possible at front the Ohio shore landed her passengers and then returned to the wreck The crew and officers of the Lomas exercised every effort to rescue the unfortunate passengers and succeeded in landing over four hundred making several trips As soon as I saw the accident I jumped into my skiff and started for the wreck When I got there I got five persons within a distance of 25 feet and there were two other skiffs below me picking them up but don't know how many they got They were hallooing a lover, and there appeared to be a great many in the wreck but it was too dark for me to tell the number I then took the parties I rescued to the Ohio side and by that time the Lomas landed a party and returned to the wreck

I had just come home from work as the boat came past and [illegible] not tell how many were on board but from what parties who had landed told me there were from 600 to 700 on board From the run of conversation of those who had been landed I gathered that from 500 to 550 had been landed Three women were carried ashore and died after having been rescued Two little boys and the assistant engineer of the Scioto were rescued and stopped at Cox's The assistant engineer told me that he thought many lives were lost as the lower decks were crowded and the boat sank instantly A man and woman passed within a hundred yards of my house He was holding her up and crying for help, but my wife saw them sink The scene was terrible I saw at least 30 young ladies who had been brought to shore by their escorts swimming and holding them up The death roll will probably exceed fifty There are more than this number missing and all chances for escape are heard from One hundred persons went from Wellsville and East Liverpool down to the scene of the disaster this morning

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

Senate.

WASHINGTON July 3

Gorman called up senate bill to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe It states that Robert Garrett, Wm F Burns and Wm F Frank of Maryland and their associate company, will lay an ocean cable from any point on the American side to any point on the European coast; bill passed with amendment extending the time within which the company shall begin laying cable to two years from passage of the act

Senate bill to amend section 2325 of revised statutes of the United States touching the issuance of patents for mineral lands was called up

Garland moved an amendment which prevailed and the bill passed

General deficiency appropriation bill was proceeded with and the committee reported an amendment constituting the first and second comptrollers of the treasury and the treasurer of the United States a board of audit who shall hear and determine all questions arising out of claims and proposed allowances growing out of the illness and burial of President Garfield providing a method of auditing them and appropriating $75 000 for the payment of awards and limiting the amount to be certified and paid for medical service to $5_,000 It is further provided that all claims shall be considered and allowances made before Jan 1, 1883 and that the aggregate amount shall not exceed the amount appropriated

Vest opposed the proposition with much earnestness He said it was well known that the late President if not butchered was unquestionably a victim of malpractice in his last illness For twenty days he was physicked leached probed and lanced while the bullet that was eating away his life never for a moment came under the attention of the physicians from a medical or scientific point of view alone The fees were grossly enormous, and would not be allowed by a court in any ordinary case. Vest then referred to newspaper charges during the president's illness, that while public bulletins were giving favorable reports, the President's physicians were telegraphing in cipher to Wall street brokers information exactly the reverse of that which was being published He thought it due to the country that investigation into that charge should even yet be made He regarded the charge of Dr. Bliss of $6000 for ten days attendance as exorbitant, and had read at the clerk's desk a statement by Dr Boynton to the effect that on or about August 8, 1881 he was informed by the late President that Dr Bliss was a volunteer in the case In this connection the testimony given by Dr Bliss that he was sent for by the Secretary of War was also read

Hale said he was unable to appreciate the force of Vest's criticism upon the medical treatment of the late president as a failure The fact was universally admitted that the president's wound was necessarily fatal After further remarks the amendment offered by Cockrill reducing the appropriation from $7 000 to $52 500, and provisos were adopted requiring claimants to file a release under seal of all claims against representatives of the late president growing out of his illness and burial The section prevailed as amended and the bill passed

On motion of Mahone, the judiciary committee was instructed to inquire into the propriety of providing for payment of expenses necessarily incurred by circuit judges while on duty and while away from their homes After placing the bankruptcy bill in order as unfinished business senate adjourned until Wednesday

House.

WASHINGTON, July 5

House went into committee and resumed consideration of the naval appropriation bill, the pending question being the amendment to the paragraph for bureau of construction and repairs, to strike out the proviso which limits to $400,000 the amount to be applied to the repair of wooden ships also to make the clause read so that the expense of such repairs shall not exceed 30 per cent of the estimated cost of a new vessel of the same size and like material ad pted

STATISTICAL NOTES.

The Pennsylvania railroad has it is estimated, $10 000 000 invested in workshops and machinery at Altoona

1153 miles of railroad were constructed in the southern states during the five months from Jan 1 to June 1

Philadelphia turns out $4 000,000 worth of stoves annually and gives employment to 12,000 persons in that business

It is rumored that $_0,000 000 of English capital will soon be invested in the mineral lands of Arkansas and Missouri

Tennessee has twenty five copper furnaces that turn out 2 000 000 pounds of copper each year The state also has 15 000 000 acres of unimproved land

There has been a rise in the price of copper in England, which is partly due to the belief that the extensive use of electricity will greatly increase the demand for that metal

Georgia has probably the smallest foreign born population of any state only 10 514 out of 1 542 000 total she probably has also the largest per cent native to her own soil over 1 400 000

Ice frozen by machinery is now used almost exclusively in southern cities as it is cheaper than that brought from the north except at seaboard prices The retail price has fallen from $3 per hundred before the war to $1 50

The astonishing statement is made that more reapers have been sold in Georgia this season than the entire collection bolt [illegible] a year ago One dealer in Madison sold seventy of the machines and could have sold thirty more if they had been ready to deliver

It is reported that thirty thousand acres of railroad land situated in [illegible] part of Wilkin county [illegible] have been sold [illegible] [illegible] Blake [illegible] and [illegible] others who propose to break ten thousand acres [illegible] and erect [illegible] houses [illegible] with a view to placing [illegible] on the farms

THE STAR ROUTE CASES TO BE THROWN OUT OF COURT

Resignation of Bancroft Davis as Assistant Secretary of State—Other Notes from the National Capital

SPECIAL DISPATCHES TO THE OREGONIAN.

WASHINGTON [illegible] the [illegible] attention [illegible] It was decided that the Senate should insert a clause in the general deficiency bill [illegible] the [illegible] expenses The committee [illegible] cordially tacked an item to the bill creating the first and second comptrollers and the treasurer of the United States a board to audit claims and issue certificates to claimants to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury The sum of $75 000 was recommended to be appropriated for payment in full of the claims and not more than $ [illegible] of this sum was to go to the doctors As soon as this item in the bill was reached trouble began Objection was made that it was not germaine to the bill and considerable time was spent in discussing the point of order It was finally decided in the negative by a vote of 20 to 20 democrats generally voting against allowing the clause to be considered Then followed one of the most unpleasant discussions heard in congress for many years The medical men were handled without mercy by several senators It was charged that they had butchered the president and the story of his lingering illness in this city and Elberon was with its concomitants vicious surgical operations pus cavities and their details related to show that the proposed appropriation for fees was too much The debate was as repulsive as can be imagined

The Star Route Fizzles.

WASHINGTON July 4—The threatened collapse of star route prosecutions is the subject of much comment here and public curiosity is beginning to be directed to government counsel in the case and their movements It is known that the relations existing between Col Bliss who is the responsible head of the prosecution and R T Merrick his first [illegible] are not as cordial lately as they have been As Bliss came into the cases just before the death of President Garfield the retirement of Attorney General MacVeagh made him master of the situation Brewster was employed in the star route cases at the same time as Bliss, but when the former was made attorney general Bliss was put at the helm He had everything to say in the matter, being recognized as a close personal friend of President Arthur and a man whose influence more than that of any other contributed to placing Senator Howe at the head of the post office department and Brewster at the head of the department of justice His word was law in those departments and when he came into the case as the assistant [illegible] government counsel was to proceed with the case known as that of mail route 40 100 from Prescott Arizona to Santa Fe, New Mexico In this he and Brewster concurred and an information was laid against Brady and others in the district court but Judge Cox had the information stricken from the records Then there began trouble among government counsel As soon as MacVeagh retired Bliss began a freezing [illegible] and in two months [illegible] all counsel employed by MacVeagh to collect evidence [illegible] Col [illegible] who insisted to pursue mail route 40 101 was dismissed and Bliss went to work [illegible] what are known as the Dorsey cases Col Merrick was called into the case as assistant counsel for the government and after examination of [illegible] found the indictments drawn in these cases were seriously defective because several defendants were named by the initials of their Christian names only [illegible] a statement he insisted on new indictments but Col Bliss [illegible] to [illegible] against [illegible] a plea in abatement [illegible] and the farcical proceedings against [illegible] a close before the government had [illegible] the case The work of [illegible] in the Dorsey cases [illegible] expense to the government and the progress of the case [illegible] any conviction It is now said Col Merrick wants to proceed as the case of the route from San Antonio to Corpus Christi, Texas which it is claimed is the strongest case the government has and that it [illegible] while Bliss is throwing every obstacle in the way It is freely charged that somebody is selling the government out as much of the evidence collected under MacVeagh and James on several of the routes is known to be very strong against the [illegible] contractors It is rumored that in an investigation by the grand jury certain pay drafts issued on a largely expedited route came into possession of a broker here through Senator Kellogg How he came possessed of the drafts has not yet been disclosed

Resignation of Bancroft Davis.

WASHINGTON July 5—Everybody was surprised to-day to learn of the resignation of Bancroft Davis assistant secretary of state and the appointment of John Davis nephew of Secretary Frelinghuysen in his place Bancroft Davis left the court of claims to take the position of assistant secretary of state with a view of seeing if he could not get congress to make the place a permanent one, so that it would correspond with the office of assistant foreign secretary in England Failing in this Bancroft Davis intends to go back to the court of claims, if the place has been held open for him The court will not meet until next December In the meantime it is not improbable he will take a trip to Europe Mr John Davis, nephew of Mr Frelinghuysen who was appointed assistant secretary of state has been for some time assistant counsel for the United States before the French claims committee Besides attending to his work there he has done most all of the work of his father in law such as it was Mr Frelinghuysen is not a man capable of doing very much work He is rather old and feeble and not inclined to exert himself Bancroft Davis has attended to all the diplomatic work while John Davis has done all the routine work of the secretary's office Besides this he is treasurer of a fashionable club here and has had the auditing of its accounts John Davis, although a comparatively young man, is a very capable one, and the president has taken a great liking to him His wife is a favorite daughter of Secretary Frelinghuysen and it is she who has largely superintended the decorations and furnishing the White House John Davis and his wife really had social management of the executive mansion so that his appointment was not so much of a surprise when it was known that Bancroft Davis was going out

In reference to a resolution of inquiry senate military committee reported that 53 per cent of the employes of the house and 15 per cent of those of the senate are [illegible] discharged [illegible] while the average in the executive departments is 40 per cent

THE DAY AT ASTORIA.

HOW OUR NEIGHBORS DOWN THE COLUMBIA CELEBRATED

The Firemen's Tournament the Leading Feature Big Crowd and a Long Procession Full Report of their Proceedings.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE OREGONIAN.

ASTORIA July [illegible]

In [illegible] Astoria [illegible] The streets are lined with [illegible] and triumphal arches span the ways as [illegible] were placed in the [illegible] Patriotism has [illegible] to the hearts [illegible] and the American flag [illegible] from [illegible] entire city Representatives of other nations [illegible] their native flags with the Star Spangled Banner of the [illegible] country and there is scarcely a country which is not represented All the buildings are beautifully decorated with boughs of evergreen [illegible] from the hill and forest and gay bunting [illegible] festoons from cornice and capital The engine houses of the fire department especially are outwardly a bank of green dotted with [illegible] while on the inside the skillful hands of the fair lady friends of the companies have transformed them into delightful summer palaces Wreaths mottoes and figures adorn the walls the chandeliers are decked with the bright garments torn from nature's breast the silver trumpets won in previous contests are filled with lovely bouquets and all arranged with a studied grace that betokens neatness of taste and delicacy of touch

THE ASSEMBLED MULTITUDE

Astoria to day is crowded with people The appearance of its [illegible] streets is that of a miniature New York Portland Salem and other cities of the interior are well represented Judge Stott is here having postponed his term of court at Hillsboro this week preferring the sea breezes of the salmon city to the horse racing at the former place "Genial Jerry" of the Standard has arrived, although he did miss the morning boat yesterday and was forced to come on the excursion He was the first man off the boat and remarked as he leaped upon the dock, "Its a cold day when a newspaper man gets left!" Both the freight and the passenger boats brought a crowded load of passengers yesterday, picking them up at every landing along the banks of the Columbia Hotels and boarding houses of every class are filled to overflowing, and it is safe to say that every bed in the city held double last night, and some were in the condition of that one when George Washington slept with his four fathers The Occident turned away scores after filling the parlors, dining room and hallways with cots and J W Cook of Portland, slept on the billiard table, patiently waiting for his bed while game after game was played until late in the night The firemen were accommodated with mattresses on the floors of the engine houses

RECEPTION OF THE FIREMEN

When the excursion party from Portland arrived last evening they were met at the landing by a delegation of Astoria boys who conducted them to the house of Rescue steamer No 2, where clam chowder was served out to all The chowder is said to have been made by Engineer Worsley and to his credit be it said it was excellent as the reportorial throat of your correspondent can testify Columbia Engine Co No 1 of Portland is the only outside company which has come in a body to participate in the tournament They brought an engine with them, which was stowed last night alongside Rescue's steamer Multnomah company is represented by a dozen or more of men Capital Engine Co No 1 of Salem and Columbia Hose Co No 2 of The Dalles are also represented by a few men from each The main object of these latter in coming beyond the interest taken by them in witnessing the tournament is to aid in the organization of a state and territorial association which it is hoped will be consummated to morrow

THE CELEBRATION.

At the break of day the bills resounded to the reverberations of the artillery which ushered in the nation's holiday by a salute of thirteen guns It was an attempt to sleep and in a short time the streets were filled again as they were the night before with a bustling mass of humanity anxious for the day's entertainment to begin From [illegible] o'clock when the last laggard had turned out until 10 in the forenoon the day was tedious The firemen occupied themselves in attentions to their visiting comrades and in making the final arrangements for the contests of the afternoon The small boy particularly was uneasy for by an ordinance of this wooden city all firecrackers were strictly prohibited even on the glorious Fourth But there is an end to all things earthly and so on everyone began to gather along the sidewalks and on the roofs and awnings of buildings where was to pass

THE TOURNAMENT

The crowd gathered on Squemoqua street filling every available space for sight-seeing before 1 30, the time appointed for the tournament to begin The parade in the forenoon had been very long, and the firemen did not return from their dinners until nearly two o'clock Then the distances were to be measured and ropes stretched to keep back the crowd All this with other little preliminaries to the contest which had been neglected took considerable time, and it was nearly four o'clock when the judges cleared the track and announced everything ready By the orders of the chief engineer one steamer was obliged to have steam up to be ready in case of fire, hence the hot water contest was run by the Astorias, and then the cold water contest by the other two companies Rescue and Columbian during which the engine of the Astorias was allowed to cool off For the better understanding of the reader the contests for each prize are given together

First Contest—Steam engines to run 100 yards hose company to run 600 yards lay 100 feet of hose and throw water $100 to first $50 to second Won by Rescue No 2 of Astoria time 1 16¾ Columbian No 3 of Portland, second time 1 34¼ Astorias made the run in the best time and got water through the hose in 1 08½ but the pipeman failed to get the nozzle on and the judges decided no water The Columbian company made the best run with the engine getting to the cistern in 48 seconds

Second Contest—Steam engines to station with [illegible] water lay 100 feet of hose and throw water 100 feet from nozzle $50 first Won by the Astoria's [illegible] Rescue's Silsby third [illegible] The Columbians with [illegible] engine which they brought with [illegible] minutes and a half to raise steam [illegible] the water to flow through the [illegible] At the end of [illegible] minutes the stream had not [illegible] and the judges called [illegible] The [illegible] of the Clapp & Jones machine [illegible] upon the lack of water in the cistern [illegible] saw that it would not direct [illegible] the [illegible] he had it [illegible]

The last entertainment and the grand wind up of the day was the visit of the Ancient and Horrible Chinook Moonshiners of Salmon City who held high carnival for two hours The following is their program me posted secretly at dead of night which was faithfully carried out

DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE OF THE CHINOOK MOONSHINERS OF SALMON CITY

Fellow Citizens When on the race-course of human events it becomes necessary for the frolicking fantasticals to connect the mirthful bands of the noble King Carnival, which have bound them together for ages to perfume like the flowers of nature of our blank existence with fun and merriment our glorious 4th of July gives vent to such jolly spirits

The separate and unequal stages of the Willamette at Portland which nature bountiful sends our neighboring city smiling of the good joke will induce many a frolicking soul to fly to our city for relief Necessity and public opinion propels us, therefore in the course of our jollification There fore be it resolved

First—That each Chinook salmon be provided with a fog whistle, to give our fishermen a chance to keep clear of them

Second—That a grand delegation of 700,000 Chinamen be sent immediately to the North Pole to discover its color, ascertain who painted it and locate there in the ice business

Third—That the stockholders of the N P R R be compelled to inhabit their land grants and be used as passengers when their road is completed

Fourth—That the Columbia river be set on fire to give the A F D a chance to try their pluck and skill

Fifth and last—That the Chinook Moonshiners make their appearance in the sunlight of the 4th of July (if it don't rain) and show the Astorians how a march and parade ought to be conducted Here is our programme

A Great Place for Fossil Tracks.

Virginia City Enterprise, June 10

A rancher from the Lower Sink of the Carson was in town yesterday and wanted to know how soon that "fossil man—the fellow who wants to see duck tracks"—would be over from California, meaning Prof Le Conte who has signified a willingness to come over and examine the fossil tracks at the state prison stone quarry "Where are your duck tracks?" was asked the rancher "Down between the Lower Sink and Humboldt Lake, among the rocks," said the man "but I don't know if they are duck tracks or goose tracks or alligator tracks—tracks of behemoth or tracks of the devil. The Injuns say the devil used to make himself pretty fresh down that way in early times" "What do the tracks look like?" "Look like there had been a big fight there, with lots of pullin' and haulin'—too and heelin'—among a whole menagerie of birds, beasts, and fishes and reptiles I want the professor to make an essay of the whole business I think it will run high in alligators and elephants, with a considerable per cent of rhinoceros"

Over 50 per cent of the population is engaged in the pursuit of agriculture in some form or degree. They outnumber more than two to one any other class in the country Not only as the greatest consumers but by reason of the controlling influence they wield in the councils of the country they have an exceedingly great interest in the tariff They are entitled to special representation in any movement for its modification or revision Yet upon this tariff commission which in theory at least is charged with very important duties in respect to the revision of the tariff the agriculturists have no representative at all

THURSDAY MORNING, JULY 6, 18-2

THE LAND OF THE PHARAOHS.

It is now clear that Egyptian affairs have reached a crisis. On one side or the other there must be a square back-down, or a conflict of arms will ensue. It is believed in London, so the dispatches say, that Alexandria will be bombarded at once. England and France have been preparing for this action, and no doubt are now ready for it. These nations are champions of the old regime in Egypt as against the military party or revolutionists. There interference in Egyptian affairs is a necessary consequence of their relations with the country. A brief statement will suffice for an outline of the events which have led to the present situation.

Egypt is an old dependency of the Ottoman empire. But with the decline of that empire Egypt has gained a status of virtual independence. The country is, however, still reckoned among the suzerainties of the sultan; but since the time of Mehemet Ali, who led the great revolt against the authority of the porte in the early part of the present century, the allegiance has been merely nominal. It has been the aim of the rulers of the country to dissolve all the ties which have bound them to the Turkish government, and to set up before the world as an independent nation. But Turkey has never conceded this, and the other powers have all along more or less directly recognized the sovereignty of the porte over the land of Egypt—more perhaps with a view of keeping some appearance of life in "the sick man" than anything else. It has been a part of the scheme of maintaining in the politics of the eastern hemisphere that fiction known as the Turkish empire.

But England and France have now secured a hold of their own upon Egypt. The country and its government are virtually mortgaged to them. The improvident rulers of Egypt got into debt to the English and French; and when the finances of the country collapsed those powers demanded that its financial administration be turned over to a commission made up of officials of the English and French governments, who would see that the creditors got their dues. This has virtually taken away the sovereignty of the country and placed it in the hands of England and France. The Suez canal, now a commercial highway of the greatest importance, is involved likewise in these arrangements. The situation then is this: Egypt claims to be an independent nation. But the political sovereignty of the country is nominally in the hands of Turkey, and its financial sovereignty is in the hands of France and England. The new difficulty grows out of a revolt against the old regime in all its parts. The pretensions of the khedive as the representative of it are defied. This puts alike in peril the claim of the sultan, the authority of the khedive, the debts of England and France and the control of the Suez canal. The country, it would appear, almost unanimously supports the new movement, which calls for "home rule," and "Egypt for the Egyptians."

But the revolutionists will find in England and France other masters than the sultan to deal with. They will protect their interests with energy and effect. The consequence will be the suppression of the insurrection; the worthless khedive and his harem will be sustained, and the shadowy power of the sultan will be faintly recognized, as heretofore.

A BEAUTIFUL SYSTEM.

While the annual river and harbor bill holds pre-eminent place as the "big divide" at Washington, it is by no means the only divide by which our statesmen tickle popular ribs and secure favor for themselves at the general cost. The public building divide holds good rank among lesser schemes of plunder. It is one which may be sprung at any time, and affords through the vague but certain force of "mutual understandings" the basis for much of the beautiful reciprocity which has been observed in the doings of the highest councils of the nation. If a gentleman wants a special favor, he has but to hint to a few associates that when they appeal for like special favors he will "stand in," which results in personal unanimity and good feeling among the members, gives half a dozen localities a slice of public pudding, perhaps secures a "return" and costs nobody—at least nobody in particular—anything. Of course the government must pay the bills, but that is no matter. But the scheme may have even greater consequences: it may be employed as the lever to move a state by paying the leaders who meddle in affairs. The greatest partisan favors may be rewarded by this beautifully ingenious and cheap plan. Time was, before the full and generous resources of partisan statesmanship were understood, when the only pay for personal political service was an office; but partisan science has progressed and has now attained a refinement complex and admirable. Here is an instance. Senator Mahone some time ago (before the election), promised the people of Lynchburg, Va., that they should have a public building. Not that Lynchburg specially needed a public building but because they wanted it, and further, doubtless, because some worker in the political vineyard of Lynchburg has stone to sell and some other worker wants a contract. But it is useless to discuss motives. The people of Lynchburg wanted a building, Senator Mahone had promised it and some time ago asked for it. The senate committee, in consideration of Senator Mahone's "peculiar position," granted it. But this only whitted the little Virginian's greed. He wanted another building for Abingdon, in Virginia, and still another for Harrisonburg, also in Virginia. The committee was shocked, and even Mr. Mahone's "peculiar position" had not the charm to gain the committee's assent, although one dignified senator remarked that, "Mahone's impudence took the cake." But the whole senate was above small jealousies, and when Mahone appealed directly to that body, his demands were granted. There was scarcely a pretense that Lynchburg and Harrisonburg and Abingdon needed public buildings, but it was remembered that Mahone had rendered important services to the republican party, and it was considered no more than right that he should collect his pay. These public buildings will long perform the important duties of object lessons, teaching the people of Virginia how important it is to be readjusters and vote with the republican party. They will learn as they gaze upon the massive piles that the political leader, whom it is most expedient for them to follow, is the man who succeeds in getting appropriations for public buildings. But reflect upon the beauties of the system. The people voted with Mahone, and have got their pay; Mahone voted with the republicans, and got his pay; Lynchburg and Harrisonburg and Abingdon and Mahone and the republicans have got their pay, and nobody is the loser, save, of course, the government.

But look at the spirit in which public buildings are "awarded." We read in the report which furnishes the facts above that when Mahone's request for more came, Senator Morrill explained that it was not customary to give any state more than one public building per annum. Senator Beck observed bitterly that he had been denied anything for one of the other Kentucky towns, because something had been given to Louisville. Another senator said that Virginia had already got public appropriations for Lynchburg and Danville. Senator Vest announced that if Senator Mahone got that other appropriation he should help Senator Beck get another one, and he would insist on another one for himself. The principle of the divide lies near the surface. The necessity for buildings asked is not so much considered as what is due the senator asking for party service, or whether it is the "turn" of the state from which the request comes. The government should have buildings where it needs them and when it needs them. Other considerations are silly and wrong.

A PROFESSIONAL CRITIC'S VIEWS.

Richard Grant White contributes an article on "The Business of Office Seeking" to the last North American. Mr. White was in the New York custom house seventeen years, and writes from fullness of knowledge. No man, he says, can fix a perfect and just rule to control our civil service: all we can hope is to so modify it as to get the greatest and best amount of work, with the least harm to the individual and to the social state. It is but an idle dream to expect an ideal civil service—what we want is the relatively best. Mr. White, with most wise men, deplores the business of office seeking, and would rather see the energy and ability of youth seek other fields of labor than the routine duties of a government clerk. Still we have such men, and how are we to determine the fittest? Mr. White has little faith in competitive examinations, nor in a system of civil service that places a young man of ability at the foot of the ladder, and makes him wait for death or resignation to give him promotion. As to examinations Mr. White remarks that the "most trusted and longest experienced public officer that ever was in the civil service of the United States, Chas. P. Clinch, for sixteen years deputy collector, and for twenty-one years assistant collector, of the port of New York, said to me, on the introduction of the competitive examination test, that he could not pass the proposed examination for the lowest grade, and that he was sure that his ablest subordinates could not pass it, although 'some of the fools might;' and that such examinations, although they might find certain men who knew certain things, would not discover, did not pretend to discover, the fitness of men for their positions in the long run."

Mr. White believes in the fixity of tenure of office during good behavior. He does not deny that some examination is necessary, but that it should be made by the heads of departments or by a commission appointed by them. In fact all responsibility must rest in the head of a department and he must be also responsible for his subordinates. To illustrate that politicians are not the parties who are constantly seeking office for others, Mr. White relates his own experience. He was one of a commission of three, appointed in 1878 by Gen. Arthur, then collector of the New York port, on the reduction of force in the custom house upon orders from the treasury department. Long and well the commission worked. Petitions and protests poured in upon them. Then, says Mr. White, out of all this stood forth one remarkable fact:

> "Although as the result of our report some two hundred men in the custom house proper were displaced, not one protest or petition came to us from a politician; all were from 'outsiders,' highly respectable and influential (that is, wealthy) men, who had friends or kinsmen in the service, and who protested against this displacement of the representatives of so much respectability. We continued our course, guided only by the collector's instructions and the requirements of the service as they appeared to us, aided in our inquiry by deputy collectors and chief clerks of divisions. Then these highly respectable protesters, who were not politicians, moved heaven and earth against us, and caused us to be summoned to Washington to account for our misdeeds; which accounting was made to such purpose that that part of the embroilment was never heard of afterward."

The practical politicians, and those holding high official position, are not altogether responsible for the business of office seeking. Influential men love to have poor dependents supported by a government office. There will be no end to this office seeking till the common mind is educated to the belief that in the long run office does not pay. Till this time comes we will have office seekers under any civil service that can be devised.

THE PRESIDENTIAL SUCCESSION.

The succession to the presidency is now fixed with such lack of definiteness that there is actually room for argument and dangerous difference of opinion as to the course to be pursued if President Arthur should die. Pursuant to suggestions made from many different quarters, Mr. Hoar has reported a bill fixing the presidential succession in case of the removal, death, resignation, or inability of both president and vice president. It shuts out the president pro tem of the senate and the speakers of the house, and imposes the duties of the presidency upon the cabinet officers in succession, according to the order of the establishment of their respective departments. Thus the candidates in the order of their precedence would be the secretary of state, the secretary of the treasury, the secretary of war, the attorney general, the postmaster general, the secretary of the navy, and the secretary of the interior. The secretary of agriculture, who, if Mr. Loring's anticipations shall be realized, will make his appearance in the next cabinet, is not included in the list. The bill is one designed to obviate a real danger, by the method most accordant with the simple dictates of common sense. It is the height of unwisdom to tempt the greatest of misfortunes by casting the whole burden of uncertainty upon the good sense, forbearance, and patriotism of the people. After the president, the members of his cabinet are the next highest executive officers. They are the best qualified to carry on the government temporarily in the spirit in which their chief begun. Indeed, there is no room to doubt that Gen. Garfield's policy would have been better represented by any of his cabinet officers than by the vice president. The reported synopsis of the bill does not clearly state whether the officer who succeeds shall serve, as does the vice president, for the remainder of the unexpired term, or only until a new election can be held. From the repeal of certain sections of the revised statutes relative to holding a new election, it is probable that the former is the case. The wisdom of this is somewhat doubtful. Unless the vacancy should occur near the end of the term, such a combination of unforeseen events would call for a relegation of the subject to the people. However, the contingency is so remote that any rules made to meet it are of necessity more precautionary than practical. It would be an excellent thing to have the succession so fixed that its title can never come into dispute. It would have been still better if the bill of Mr. Hoar included a formal definition of the term "disability," so that one other source of possible disturbance might have been removed.

Everybody must regret that the bills growing out of the illness and death of the late president, have occasioned a disgusting squabble. Doubtless the gentlemen who took part in the discussion on Monday felt keenly ashamed of the proceeding. But if consideration of the bills is bad, the making of them was worse. In the hope of payment without question, the doctors charged sums vastly out of proportion to the value of their services, the furnishers of supplies doubled their accounts in a most disreputable manner, and even senators and congressmen who attended the body to the grave drank, smoked and made merry over the funeral "meats." Throughout the whole proceeding, decency and honesty were outraged. The committee, of which Garfield's congressional successor was the chairman, could have saved the nation the public shame of the present discussion, but no way to avoid it seems left now.

This seems to be a Frelinghuysen administration. Frelinghuysen is premier, Frelinghuysen's son-in-law is the president's private secretary, Frelinghuysen's daughter is the lady of the white house. Frelinghuysen's nephew has been assistant secretary of state, which place he has just resigned to make room for Frelinghuysen's other nephew. The rest of the Frelinghuysen family are doubtless "coming on the rise."

The British steamer Altonower, which brought over a cargo of Chinese to San Francisco, was kept in quarantine 54 days. Her expenses were about $400 a day, making a net sum of $21,600. Served her right for being a "slaver." The trip, which was undertaken through greed, resulted in heavy loss.

The dispatches continue to show the farcical nature of the alleged prosecution of the star route rascals. It becomes apparent that the thieves are being protected rather than prosecuted. The fruits of Guiteau's "inspiration" will ripen right along for the next three years.

It is the general opinion in the east that Mr. Blaine while retaining his ambition and hope for the presidency, will make no fight for the nomination in '84. He has seen the folly of too much management.

AMUSEMENTS.

Callender's minstrels have established themselves. Last night they played to another packed house to the delight of all. Virginny Armstrong in his specialties of acrobatic feats is wonderful. He lifts a table weighing probably fifty pounds in his teeth and raises it without help from the hands from a horizontal to a perpendicular position. His imitations and his circus act though entirely out of the line of minstrelsy could not be made better. Horace Weston executes a very good banjo solo and a quartette of melodies including Mcln[illegible] are irresistible. The closing sketch was equal to His way to the famous Muldoon's picnic. An entire change of programme is announced for to-night. It will be found in the advertising columns.

THE FIRST HEAT

Was won by Maggie Arnold which trailed along behind the other two and put the heat upon a brush winning [illegible] with Pedro a good second and Tempest a long badly. The next heat was a good send off for Pedro with Tempest on his wheel but the big chestnut broke and lost his place while Maggie fell into second position and went after Pedro [illegible] style. But she was going too fast for her go and McManus could not steady her. About half way up the back stretch she grabbed herself and it threw her entirely out of her stride. Pedro was ahead of her and she closed the gap so fast that it carried her off her feet and Pedro won in 2:35 amid deafening yells. Pools now sold at $10 for Maggie and $[illegible] for the field but the mare had evidently taken matters to heart and could not come up to good enough speed to beat the son of Snowstorm. He won the third heat in 2:33½ and the fourth deciding heat of the race in [illegible] 33¾ with Tempest a bad third. We append a summary. Purse $300 for 2:38 class. Mile heats 3 in 5

THE KNOWING ONES

Got badly rattled and some of them denounced the ex sheriff of Boise because he did not tell them how good a horse he had and let the butternut brigade get away with the pools. They said he only won $60 in the race besides the purse whereas he could have won $[illegible]600 with $80 or $100. But old Luis laughed at them and told them he would not have felt obliged to repay their losses had [illegible] got beaten. The crowd now huddled around the pool box and began to speculate on the dash of a mile and a quarter for which three racks were entered—Fred Collier, J[illegible] Howell and Trade Dollar. Of all betting races ever seen at Hillsboro there was never anything like this race. The owners of the horses stood there for an hour and fired in twenty-dollar pieces as fast as the clerk could record the pools and fill out the tickets. We append a sample of the auction.

Fred Collier	[illegible]	$10	$18	$60	$[illegible]0	$10
Howell	4	11	18	[illegible]0	20	19
Trade Dollar	4	8	20	60	0	15
	$1[illegible]	$30	$56	$1[illegible]0	$[illegible]0	$[illegible]

The culmination of this speculation was when old man Mulkey pulled out a roll of greenbacks and blew in $600 on old Joe Howell at even money with each of the others.

THE FAME OF COLLIER

Had waned somewhat since his defeat by the Duchess of Norfolk at San Francisco in the Pa[illegible] Cup and when Mulkey pranced out with his satchel of greenbacks the sporting element followed the veteran into the slaughter. Trade Dollar had a host of friends for every place and when the portly form of the obese Crabb was seen buying her at $20 a rattle the east country folks showered their twenties into the box with a good will. Every horse in the race was alternately the favorite. In drawing for places Howell was in the middle and Collier on the outside. The riders were weighed and the horses walked to the head of the homestretch where they turned but once and the flag fell on a start which was rather favorable to the old horse for he went like a rock from a catapult hotly pursued by Trade Dollar while the bald faced gelding dropped in behind the financial lady and aimed to run as short a race about the turns as was possible. Gallantly old Howell led to the quarter in this position passing the wire a length ahead while Fortune was pulling Trade Dollar's head around to the saddle as they went under the wire. They entered the back stretch in this same position save that Collier had dropped back to about six lengths.

THE HALF MILE POLE

Which was three-quarters of this race was where Trade Dollar shot her bolt and fell back beaten hopelessly. As they rounded the bend up came Collier with a rush and Cooper began to spur the old horse who responded gamely. Then the rider of Collier drew his whip struck his horse two sharp cuts with it and took a strong bracing pull. The white-legged gelding came thundering down the home stretch as light as a hare and at the draw gates was lapped on Howell. Cooper was scourging the old horse mercilessly but it was no use. Collier won by a short length after the most exciting finish we have seen in years and Trade Dollar completely pumped out and rolling like a drunken man was about 40 yards behind the hero of Montana. Some $5000 changed ownership on this race of which we append a summary.

Purse $400, for all ages. One mile and a quarter —W M Ayers ch g Fred Collier by Joe Hooker—Puss by Norfolk 4 years 1

Cy Mulkey's b g Howell by Bonnie Scotland—Etta Shipper by Sovereign aged 2

Jerome Porter's ch m Trade Dollar by Norfolk—Eva Ashton 6 years 3

Time, 2.13½

THE MILE WAS RUN

From stand to stand in 1 46¼ and from the starting point to the same place in 1 45¼. Had Cooper got off last and pulled in as Collier did, putting the heat on a final rush he might have made a faster race but it is hard to say whether he could have beaten Collier for the latter has a terrible turn of speed. The winner of this race was bred by Theodore Winters of El Arroyo Stud Farm 20 miles from Sacramento and was purchased for $1700 by his present owner about four months ago. He is a red sorrel with four white feet and a broad blaze and reminds one of the pictures of Aristides the conqueror of Ten Broeck and sire of Henlopen. His stride is long and low and he runs with the greatest ease. In the stable he is kind as a kitten and his trainer A J Stemler is fairly in love with him for there never was a better tempered horse. His sire did himself no credit on the turf but he is one of the greatest breeding horses in America. Collier's granddam was own sister to the famous two miler Dashaway the conqueror of Langford Volscian Miami and many other good ones between 1853 and 1866.

TO-DAY'S RACES

Consist of a half mile dash for Oregon and Idaho bred horses for which there are five entries—Ickgo Silvertail Mayflower Honest John and Lula Riggs the latter of which sold favorite last night. The other race is a trot for three year olds embracing the get of Kisber Rockwood Hambletonian Membrino and other noted sires. There will be six starters in this class and those who wish to see the celebrities of the future would do well to take in this trot. Several shocking youngsters are in the race and we may look for a close contest although no very fast time is expected. The Palo Alto youngsters of this age can trot in 2:21 but Oregon has not got that far along as yet. If [illegible] is beaten it is good enough for Oregon when we consider how meager have [illegible] opportunities [illegible]

CLOUD DREAMS.

Fresh is the wind in its blowing
  Over the springtide blue,
High are the clouds in their going
  Afret where the winds pursue,
With beauty their only showing,
  White with their own content,
Gayly they go without knowing
  Whence come or whither sent.

From southward to westward drifted
  All of this April day,
Full lightly they swing, uplifted
  Over the city's grey;
Tossed free of the wind and rifted
  In darts of sudden blue,
Caught warm of the sun and sifted
  With clear light thro' and thro'

O'er shadows deep of azure
  All as the wise winds blow,
With a seemly grace of leisure,
  Cloud after cloud they go;
In a dance of sunny pleasure
  That keepeth high and clear,
As unto an airy measure
  Too fine for human ear.

I watch them drift and dally,
  And shine as they were wet,
With the brightness blown in sally
  Of winds that veer and fret;
Till my youth dreams rise and rally
  And press me still to seek
A cloud land of slope and valley,
  Sun touched on one pure peak.

O, clouds! you have me for lover,
  With love that shall not cease,
Though the dreams of youth lie over,
  Your beauty bringeth peace;
In me ye can still discover
  The merry hearted lad,
Who was wont to watch you hover,
  In dreams that made him glad.
—Good Words.

MR. PERIWINKLE'S PARTY.

Men have been accustomed so long to monopolize literature, and have agreed so unanimously to caricature women, that it is high time the sex took up their own cause. From Mrs. Candle down to Mrs. Smith Jones, their foibles have been held up to create amusement. As an aggrieved female, and a married one, I desire to paint the other side of the picture, and to sketch "the lords of creation," not as they seem to their satisfied selves, but as they really are.

My husband, Mr. Periwinkle, is as worthy, I have no doubt, as most of his sex; but, as I often tell him, he is "neither inspired nor infallible." He seems to think, for instance, that all the troubles of the matrimonial connection are concentrated on his head, and that consequently he alone has the right to grumble or be cross, no matter how much the servants have worried me during the day, no matter how vexatious the baby has been. Periwinkle expects me to greet him with smiles when he comes home, and, if he is in a bad humor, to talk him into a good one. I am not, I believe, naturally unamiable, but he often makes my blood boil, I own, by such behavior. I thank heaven, I tell him at these times, that this is not Turkey, and that women are not slaves.

There is nothing Periwinkle hates so much as an evening party. He is always cross when he has to accompany me to one, and would never allow me to receive my friends in this way if I was not duly sensible of what I owe to society, and therefore firm. He tells me that he is tired out at night, and that he don't care for dancing, and that we women do nothing but chatter idle gossip all the evening. But I reply that wives who are kept at home all day occupied in domestic duties need some recreation, and that they rarely obtain it except at a tea party or a ball, and I add that if our sex talks gossip his talks politics, which is worse.

Last winter I tried to get Periwinkle's consent for once, to give a party. Always before I had issued invitations on my own responsibility, and, when everything was arranged, had told him what I had done. But wishing to see if it was possible for a man to be anything but a bit of concentrated selfishness, I determined to make the experiment of obtaining his consent. It was, however, in vain. And all I got for my pains was the general laugh of my female acquaintances, to whom I had told my plan, and who triumphed over its failure, for they predicted it.

To these, however, there was one exception. Jane Krazee, a wild slip of a thing, and own neice to Periwinkle, resolutely maintained that we did injustice to her uncle, that he was only plaguing me, and that he would give a dashing party before the season was over. She went so far as to wager me a pair of gloves that she was right and I wrong. As if she knew Periwinkle better than I did!—I, to whom every cranny of his mind and corner of his character was as visible as specks of dust on my parlor carpet! Conceited thing! But conceit runs in the Periwinkles.

One night as Periwinkle and I sat in the parlor, he reading and I sewing, I thought I would make a last effort—quite forgetting that if I succeeded I should lose a pair of gloves.

"Periwinkle," I said, "about this party—when shall it be?"

"Hang the party!" retorted he, throwing down the newspaper. "Am I never to hear the last of it? I thought I told you long ago I wouldn't consent to any such thing."

I became enraged, as a woman should, at such language. He had been testy all the evening, and I had borne it meekly; but this passed the bounds of endurance.

"You needn't make such a fuss," I said, "and lose your temper, nor will I allow anybody to talk to me in that way—let me tell you that Mr. Periwinkle!"

"Hoity, toity," he began, but stopped abruptly, for at that instant the bell was rung with a violence that threatened to pull down the house, and directly the door was opened. I heard the voices of several of my acquaintances.

I stepped to the door of the parlor just in time to meet my friends. They nodded, and went up to the drawing-room, as if it was all right. I followed them in amazement, for I noticed that they were dressed in ball attire. When they saw my plain gown they seemed a little disconcerted, and a moment after, noticing that no lights were lit in the drawing-room, they appeared more so; however, Jane, who was one of them, said: "I thought I'd come early, and bring Mary and Harriet with me. There, I'll light the gas, if you'll help the girls off with their hoods and things."

She did it so naturally, that I saw all at once the little vixen had evidently made a plot with Periwinkle, and together they had got up a party, keeping me in the dark about it till the scheme was actually executed. I had half a mind to be angry, but I thought better of it, determining to receive the company as if I had been at the bottom of it all—for this, I knew, would be the best way to annoy Jane. Only I resolved that, after the guests were gone, Periwinkle should hear a bit of my mind.

And now carriages began to dash up to the door, the bell was rung incessantly, visitors arrived in a continuous stream. Hurrying into my chamber I hastily changed my dress, then ordered a room to be arranged for the gentlemen, and, in less than five minutes, ran breathlessly down to receive my company. Periwinkle was already there in earnest conversation with Jane, but pretended, as soon as he saw me, to be more ill-humored than ever. I took no notice of him, however, but devoted myself to my guests. It was hard work, for there was no music. And when the refreshments were brought in, I saw how little men knew of such things, for Periwinkle hadn't ordered half enough ice cream, and had bought twice too many oysters.

I held in, firm to my resolution, till the last guest had departed. It was Jane who bade Periwinkle and me "Good night," with a demure look, as she tripped from the door with her lover, Harry Cousins. Then my indignation burst forth. Turning to Periwinkle, I pushed him in and slammed the door violently.

"I hope you are satisfied now," I said; "and a pretty mess you've made of it, to be sure. Little you know about giving a party. The next time, I think, it would be better to tell me, sir, and not make a fool of yourself, when you fancy you're fooling me."

"Give a party—not tell you—fooling you," stammered Periwinkle. "I don't know what you mean. It's you, madam, that's deceiving—"

"What!" I cried, amazed at such effrontery. "Didn't you and Jane make up a plot between you? Didn't she issue the invitations, and you order the entertainment?"

"You astonish me!" he cried, starting back. "Didn't you, let me ask, issue the cards, and leave me to get the eatables at the eleventh hour? Jane as good as told me so."

I did not believe a word he said, and was about to reply tartly, when the door bell rang again, and, supposing somebody had forgotten something, I turned to open it before I answered.

"It was Jane, who had returned. She did not enter, however, though my eyes asked her as plainly as eyes could to make haste and get what she had left behind; but standing on the doorstep she looked past me at Periwinkle, and said demurely:

"Uncle—by the by—I had forgotten. What's the day of the month?"

"The day of the month? The first of April, to be sure!" It flashed on me and Periwinkle simultaneously. Jane had invited the guests in our names to make April fools of both of us. I looked at him; he looked at me; we both had half a mind to be angry; but Jane's ringing merriment, as she tripped off again, was infectious, and we stood there laughing at each other till the tears ran down our cheeks.

To this day Jane teases us about Mr. Periwinkle's party, and says it's the only one we have never quarreled over.

OREGON'S WONDERS.

The Latest Adventure on Mount Hood.

Wonderful Discovery of a Secret Cave Near "The Crater."

HAIRBREADTH ESCAPE.

"LET ME DIE HERE ALONE!"

A Plucky Party—Saved as by a Miracle.

The city of Portland, Oregon, is famous for many things. Its rapid growth within the past year, great as it appears, is not a beginning of what it is capable of becoming, and what the great through lines across the continent are destined to make it within the next two years. Then, too, the long overland trains will come thundering over the bridge across the Willamette, bearing their heavy crowd of passengers from the east, who will come thronging to our shores from all parts of the civilized world to witness our wonderful growth and participate in the results of our active business and enjoy a share of our prosperity and wealth. At the same time there will come many parties of tourists who will be drawn hither by the grand and beautiful scenery. Among the innumerable attractions of Oregon are those hoary-headed sentinels of the age—Mounts Hood, Helena, Adams, Rainier and others, whose white crowns can be seen at all seasons of the year from the high grounds of Portland. These mountains invariably excite an immense amount of interest in all strangers, and even older residents, who see these mountains in all their varying aspects throughout the year, have an intense longing to visit them,—Mount Hood, particularly, because it is the nearest, and often seems as if it would take but a few hours to pass to its summit. This Mount Hood is a wonder. There is every evidence that it is volcanic and within the memory of the old settlers of this valley it has often been discovered smoking. It has been said, even, that fire has issued from near the top, where the remains of an old crater are plainly to be seen. The mountain is over sixty miles from Portland in a straight line and about one hundred miles by the roads. Several expeditions have been fitted out for the purpose of exploring the mysteries of Mount Hood. The latest was by a party of sportsmen, who took their rods, guns, provisions, etc., on pack mules, and with all the implements necessary to make the most thorough observations. We have not time to trace out the weary windings of our party, but one night when we were camping near "the crater," well up toward the very summit of the mountain, we had a remarkable adventure. Joe Benson, one of the most intelligent young men of our party, wearied by the toils of a very hard day amid the deep snows, laid down in our rude camp, and was sound asleep before the other party thought of retiring for the night. As we all snuggled into our many folds of blankets, one after another we marked how soundly Joe was sleeping. After all had passed into the Land of Nod, Joe says he felt a cold hand placed on his face. He looked up and beheld the strangest looking object he ever saw in his life. The form appeared to be that of a dried up old man with long, flowing white locks and beard that came nearly down to his waist. Without uttering a word, the form motioned Joe to get up and follow him. He obeyed, and as he started he looked at his watch, and found it five before midnight. The strange guide led the way a short distance up and around the peaks of Mount Hood, and then stood before an open door leading directly into the mountain. A short and easy flight of steps soon led to another door, which the strange guide pushed open. Then a most marvelous sight presented itself to Joe's vision. He found himself in the midst of a well lighted and comfortably warmed hall, whose richness and splendor might rival that of Aladdin's famous palace; only the hanging and ornamentation were anything but Oriental. The room was gorgeously decked with the richest of furs of all shades and of all kinds of animals. Elk horns and deer horns of mammoth size, and ornamented with gold and silver, were tastefully displayed on all sides. Joe's guide had left him, but before he could recover from his amazement, a door opened, and in stepped the handsomest girl of sixteen that Joe ever laid eyes upon. She was heavily enrobed with the most beautiful apparel of fur. She stepped forward as if she knew our hero, and was about to speak to him, when a most horrid looking hobgoblin of a dwarf came in from behind, and grasping Joe by the throat thrust him outside and threw him headlong down a steep mountain. Fortunately there was a projecting shelf of a rock down about ten feet that broke the force of Joe's fall. He clung with a grip as for life, and shouted for help. It was a startling cry to those of us who had been quietly dreaming of home in our rude tent. We sprang to our feet and looked about to see who of the number could be in danger. We soon discovered that it was our genial, jolly Joe. Just then another despairing cry came from a point nearly above us on the rocks. We scrambled out after our distressed companion, and after great efforts succeeded in rescuing him from his perilous position, and brought him bruised and bleeding into the tent. He became unconscious soon after we got him in. The first thing we did was to examine him and find that no bones were broken, though there were several ugly contusions. By morning the poor fellow was not able to move at all from numerous swellings. As our provisions were getting short and the time for our descent from the mountain had fully arrived, it became a serious question as to what we could do with Joe. To carry him down the mountain was impossible, and he could not, in his bruised and stiffened condition, move a step. A council of war was held, and the embarrassing situation fully discussed. To add to the terrors of our situation there was evidently a terrific storm brewing, and the certainty of death stared us in the face. By this time Joe had recovered full consciousness, and he bravely and unselfishly begged us to leave him to perish and save our lives. "Why should we all perish for the sake of one!" he exclaimed. "No; go and leave me, I implore you." Of course this was out of the question, and every man of us said we would all die together, rather than leave the favorite of our party to perish alone. Just then a happy thought struck one of our party. He had prudently put into his baggage a bottle of that great German remedy, St. Jacobs Oil. It was hastily produced, and the way we went to rubbing that famous remedy over Joe's bruises was a caution to surgery. The thing worked like a charm, and before noon we had our patient on his feet, and was slowly wending our way down the mountain. Fortunately, the storm left off until we reached a farm house at the base, and then it burst upon the mountain in all its fury. If we had remained we should certainly have perished in the cold blasts that swept over the mountain's brow. We shall bless St. Jacobs Oil all our days as the savior of our lives in that terrible adventure. We had enough of Mount Hood. We can safely assert that "distance lends enchantment to the view," and when the storms rage about that mountain we prefer to "scent the battle from afar." When we got back to Portland some of the particular intimates of Joe Benson asked us if he played any of his old somnambulistic tricks upon us while in the mountains. So the secret was out. And that was what was the matter with Joe, although he told us the story of the little old white man and the charming young lady with all the eloquence of a real scene, and not the "vision of a night."

We have learned, however, to prize St. Jacobs Oil for all bruises, swellings and hurts of that character. There is not a hunting expedition or excursion party that leaves Portland for a jaunt to the woods or to visit the beauties of Oregon scenery that does not count several bottles of St. Jacobs Oil as a part of the necessary supplies for such a trip. For both man and beast its effect is like magic, and its remedial power is sure and permanent. This is the testimony of hundreds.

Paine & Son, who keep a large boarding stable on the corner of Third and Ash streets, have the care of some of the best horses of private parties that are driven in our streets. They have used it for the horses in their charge, and speak in the highest terms of the remedy. It never fails in rheumatism or lame feet or shoulders, ailments that often affect horses in our changeable climate.

Mr. W. A. Hart is the popular chief engineer of the Portland fire department. He must be here and there and everywhere. Nothing escapes his vigilant eye in the important branch of the city government of which he is the head. He has a most thorough appreciation of St Jacobs Oil. He authorizes us to say that he has used it in his family for various aches and pains, and especially for rheumatism in his own case, and it always proved an effective cure. He would not be without it upon any consideration. He has seen it used on the department horses with salutary effect, and a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil is kept at each engine house for any emergency that may arise. Many firemen have tried it with the most beneficial results.

Mrs. R. Wiegand, at 128 Third street, between Washington and Alder streets, tells a curious thing about the St. Jacobs Oil. She says she uses it in her family of several children, and would on no consideration be without it in the house. On one of her children the remedy has no effect, but for all the others it is the most prompt and efficacious remedy she ever saw. A little boy and a little girl are often troubled with sore throats. She wets a bandage in the St. Jacobs Oil and binds it on the throat, and the soreness disappears forthwith.

One of her little girls has been frequently troubled with nervous headache. Mrs. Wiegand says she applies the oil to the back part of the head, near the base of the brain, and it always brings relief. Mrs. W. says people must not be discouraged if it should happen now and then that a person is found that the oil will not affect. She believes, however, that these are very rare cases.

Geo. H. Ward, the constable of the western precinct in this city, is a healthy, robust looking individual, and he discharges the most difficult duties of his office as fearlessly as a hero. He has been afflicted for ten years with rheumatism in the back. He says: "I tried one bottle of St. Jacobs Oil about two months ago, and it knocked the spots out of my rheumatism, and I have not been troubled since." Captain Charles Gritzmacher is one of the most popular and efficient officers that was ever in the Portland Police force. Several months ago he was laid up with a most unaccountable pain in his leg, near the knee joint. The limb began to swell and the pain became intense. A friend who had received relief from St. Jacobs Oil, recommended the Great German Remedy to Captain Gritzmacher, who obtained a bottle and began to apply it. Almost instantly it gave a little relief, and by the time he began the use of the second bottle, the pain and swelling disappeared, and he has had no return of them since.

Samuel Ryan, an up-town blacksmith, while shoeing a horse received a severe kick on the leg. He did not mind it at first; but when the next morning he found the leg greatly swollen, and he was unable to move the knee joint, he began to think it was a serious affair. A neighbor who knew all about the popular remedy, recommended St. Jacobs Oil. One bottle fixed him all right, and on the second day he was at work again. Michael Delany, a longshoreman, took a severe cold about a year since while in the rush of loading the steamer State of California. Though regarded as the most robust and healthy of the gang, yet for eight months he never did a stroke of work, but was constantly growing worse with what he termed a strain in his back. An unusual effort may have been the first hurt, but the cold caused the rheumatism to set in, and the doctors seemed to afford Mike no relief. They all said he must die. Another longshoreman who had tried St. Jacobs Oil, kindly bought a bottle and took it to Mike with full directions to how use it. Indeed the friend insisted on applying it himself. The first bottle appeared to have but little effect. Not to be discouraged the friend procured another, and that had a little effect. But by the time that a half a dozen bottles had been used, Mike was down at the wharf, laboring as faithfully in the hard work of loading and unloading ships, as any other man in his useful and honorable calling.

Abraham Simon, of 258 Yamhill street, says he would never think of living without a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil in the house. Thos Hepworth who has every season braved the dangers of the Columbia Bar Salmon fishing, says he will not start out on a trip without St Jacobs Oil. John Rose employed by the Portland Paving Co., had a severe bruise by a large rock falling on his foot. St. Jacobs Oil brought him out all right.

We might go on and multiply these testimonials indefinitely; but the above will suffice to convince any one, who can be persuaded by reasonable testimony bearing directly upon the question, that the remedy, whose surprising effects are so clearly and reliably stated, is the remedy for the people.

DECISION IN U. S. CIRCUIT COURT, BY DEADY, J.

U. S. Circuit Court—District of Oregon.

WEDNESDAY, July 5, 1882.

A. H. Tanner v. The Dundee Land Investment Co. and William Reid—No. 817. Suit in equity for specific performance.

(1.) INTEREST ON NOTE. Where a note is made payable at a future day "with" interest at a prescribed rate per annum such interest does not become due or payable until the principal sum does, unless there is a special provision in the note or contract to that effect.

(2.) SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE. A contract to convey real property will be specifically enforced as prayed for by the plaintiff where its terms are submitted by the defendant and the only objection made to such performance is based upon a construction of the contract, as to the part to be performed by the plaintiff, which in the judgment of the court is not supported by the language of the contract or the circumstances of the case.

DEADY, J.

This suit was commenced in the state circuit court for this county and removed here by the defendants, one of whom is a British corporation and the other a British subject. It is brought to enforce the specific performance of a contract for the sale and conveyance of real property, and was heard on bill and answer.

It is alleged in the bill that the defendant, the Dundee Land Investment Co., on July 15, 1881, was the owner of certain real property bounded as therein described, without stating the quantity, and situate in King's addition to Portland, and on the same day its manager, the defendant William Reid, entered into a written contract with the plaintiff, in which he acknowledged the receipt of $400 from the plaintiff, as a part of the purchase price of $2500 for said real property, then occupied by the plaintiff, as a residence, and also thereby agreed that he would within 60 days, cause to be made and delivered to the plaintiff a warranty deed to the premises from his co-defendant. The agreement is signed by William Reed, but not the plaintiff, and in addition to the foregoing contains the following condition or stipulation.

"It is also understood and agreed that the balance due upon said purchase price, to wit; the sum of $2100, shall be paid in 20 notes of $105 each, payable one every six months with interest at 10 per centum per annum upon each of said 20 notes of $105 each from their date; that is to say, the first of said notes shall become due and payable six months after the date thereof and the second one year after the date thereof and so on with the rest, and said notes shall be secured by a mortgage upon said property to be made, executed and delivered at the same time said deed is delivered."

That within the sixty days the deed aforesaid was duly executed and delivered to the defendant Reid for the plaintiff who still has the same in his possession, but refuses to deliver it to the plaintiff; and that the plaintiff is still in the possession of the property, and has been and still is ready and willing to perform his part of said contract.

The answer of the defendants admits the allegations of the bill, except as to the offer of the plaintiff to perform and the refusal of the defendant to do so; and alleges the fact to be that the defendants have been and are ready to deliver the deed to the plaintiff as provided in the contract, but that he refused and still refuses to make and deliver his 20 promissory notes, as aforesaid, payable one each six months from the date thereof, with interest at 10 per centum per annum and the interest then accrued upon the whole of said sum of $2100 or so much thereof as may remain unpaid.

On the argument, the plaintiff admitted that by the terms of the sale he was bound to give his 20 notes for the balance of the purchase money—$2100—payable on every six months with the interest thereon from date, but the counsel for the defendants insisted that he was also bound thereby to undertake and promise in or by said notes, that upon the payment of each of them he would also pay the interest then accrued and unpaid on all the rest of them; and whether he is so bound or not is the only question in the case.

No authorities have been cited by either party and none will be referred to by the court.

It is too plain for argument that no interest is due on a promissory note, payable at a future day, "with interest," at a certain rate per annum, until the principal sum is due. The promise to pay the interest, is to pay it with the principal—at the time the latter becomes due.

And if the payee or holder of a note claims that interest is due and payable thereon during the period the note has to run, he must show some special provision or agreement to that effect, before his claim can be allowed.

The only matter in this agreement or terms of sale upon which the defendants base their claim for notes with interest thereon, payable semi-annually, are the words—"upon each of said 20 notes of $105"—as they occur in the clause declaring that the $2100 shall be paid in 20 notes "payable one every six months with interest at 10 per centum per annum upon each of said 20 notes of $105 each from their date."

But these words—"upon each of said 20 notes"—are used in this connection merely to emphasize the idea already expressed that each of said notes was to bear interest, and this is made still more apparent by what follows—"each from their date"—that is, each of these notes is to bear interest at the prescribed rate from its date. The words in this sentence—"each from their date," have just as much significance as the ones—"upon each of said 20 notes." Strictly speaking they are both superfluous, because it was already provided that the $2100 should be paid in 20 notes, payable one every six months with interest at a prescribed rate—which could only mean that each note should bear such interest at and from its date.

But, if the plaintiff is bound by this clause to undertake to pay the interest on all the unpaid notes every six months as one of them becomes due and payable, then he must agree to do so on each of them, not from the date of the last payment "but from their date," which would require him to pay the first six months interest on the last note nineteen times over, and so on. But the agreement itself resolves this matter very clearly under a videlicet in the following clause—"the first of said notes shall become due and payable six months after date thereof, and the second one year after the date thereof and so on with the rest;" the plain purport of which is, that the principal and interest on each note was to become due and payable at once and together, and neither of them in instalments.

It may be that it was the intention of the defendant, Reid, or that it was in his mind, that the interest on this sum or the instalments of it which remained due from time to time could be paid semi-annually, but as he omitted to insert any provision to that effect in the terms of sale he cannot now insist upon the delivery of notes to that effect as a precondition to the delivery of the deed.

A court of equity will decree a specific performance of a contract respecting real property where: (1), The contract is in writing; (2), Is certain and fair in all its parts; (3), Is for an adequate consideration; and (4), Is capable of being performed. 2 Stor. Eq. Jur. § 751.

There is no allegation in the answer of the defendants tending to show that the notes which the plaintiff offers to give and the contract appears to require were not an adequate consideration for the premises at the date of the sale, nor that any advantage was taken of the defendants in the sale or any mistake made in reducing its terms to writing.

The only objection made in the answer to a specific performance of the contract as prayed for by the plaintiff, is that the plaintiff has not offered to perform it according to the construction which the defendants now seek to have put upon the terms of sale a construction which it appears to the court is altogether unsupported by the language of the writing or the circumstances of the case.

If there was a serious doubt about the terms of payment the court would refuse to enforce the contract against the defendants' construction of it, but where there is no room for such doubt the contract must be enforced notwithstanding the defendants' objection.

The decree of the court will be that the defendant Reid deliver the deed of the defendant, The Dundee Land Investment Co., to the plaintiff within ten days and upon the delivery to him of the notes and mortgage for the $2100 as provided in the terms of sale according to the judgment of this court and that the plaintiff recover his costs.

The plaintiff pro se.
